Caffeine is one of the fastest acting drugs known to man. When we drink it, almost every cell in the body, including the brain, absorbs it within minutes....Caffeine intercepts adenosine, turning [its] "I'm tired" message into "I'm wide awake." The result is an invigorating buzz coffee drinkers crave NOT (Sunday Morning, 2002) BUT ("Caffeine Nation," 2002).

PLAGIARISM

Original Passage

In order to communicate effectively with other people, one must have a reasonably accurate idea of what they do and do not know that is pertinent to the communication. Treating people as though they have knowledge that they do not have can result in miscommunication and perhaps embarrassment. On the other hand, a fundamental rule of conversation, at least according to a Gricean view, is that one generally does not convey to others information that one can assume they already have.

From Raymond S. Nickerson's "How We Know-and Sometimes Misjudge-What Others Know: Imputing One's Own Knowledge to Others." Psychological Bulletin 125.6 (1999): p737.

Acceptable summary

Nickerson (1999) argues that clear communication hinges upon what an audience does and does not know. It is crucial to assume the audience has neither too much nor too little knowledge of the subject, or the communication may be inhibited by either confusion or offense (p. 737).

Acceptable Paraphrasing

Nickerson (1999) suggests that effective communication depends on a generally accurate knowledge of what the audience knows. If a speaker assumes too much knowledge about the subject, the audience will either misunderstand or be bewildered; however, assuming too little knowledge among those in the audience may cause them to feel patronized (p.737).

Summary or Plagiarism?

For effective communication, it is necessary to have a fairly accurate idea of what our listeners know or do not know that is pertinent to the communication. If we assume that people know something they do not, then miscommunication and perhaps embarrassment may result (Nickerson, 1999).

Plagiarism

Strategies for Avoiding Plagiarism

- Put in quotations everything that comes directly from the text—especially when taking notes
- Paraphrase, being sure not to just rearrange or replace a few words
 - Write out the idea in your own words
- Check your paraphrase against the original text
 - Be sure you have not accidentally used the same phrases or words and that the information is accurate
